Rebels Prey on Refugees, Use Camps to Strike at Brynadians

Brave OPHUG fighters liberating a small village near the St. Catherine River, Beta Province, from Zaharian occupation.

Another victory for the Brynanian people last week as OPHUG fighters liberated yet another village from Zaharian occupation. Former inhabitants have been hesitant to return to their homes however, for fear of retribution from groups still active to the south. Words cannot sufficiently describe the injustices inflicted upon these good people, mostly craftsmen, herders and farmers. They were forced to flee their homes under persistent rebel attacks, many lost neighbours and relatives. Those who dared return found their homes looted and stripped of all valuables, both material and sentimental. Since then the village has been used as a staging camp to launch attacks into other free areas. This blatant disregard for the lives of innocent Brynanians is but only part of the greater narrative however.

“I want to go home to my family, but it is not safe for them as long as Zaharians terrorize our country.”

-ISKRA HARNOTH, OPHUG VOLUNTEER

Reports have surfaced of rebels infiltrating refugee camps, those of the greatest concern being camp 9 and even camp 8. Zaharian recruiters have been attempting to radicalize refugees there, using erroneous claims to persuade those who will listen and coercion to manipulate those who will not. One source from camp 9, who wishes to remain anonymous for their safety, told this reporter that recruiters have been stealing medical supplies and valuables from the refugees and camp stocks to support their militias. The anonymous source was hesitant to share any of this information with us for fear that the rebels would threaten their family if they were noticed speaking on the topic.

Recruiting from the camps appear to be successful, as another anonymous source has confirmed. The source was able to identify several previous inhabitants of camp 9 on an attack by rebel forces on a government checkpoint south of Biku three weeks ago. Passing through the checkpoint during the time of the attack, this Biku resident immediately recognized some of the attackers while they were rounding up hostages. The source managed to slip away without harm, but describes the horror that unfolded there as “shameless slaughter”.

Similar activities are suspected to be present in other refugee camps throughout the region, with some suggesting that the Ruritanian government may be supplying the Zaharian menace through camps 5 and 6. The presence of Ruritanian advisors and forces within Brynanian does not help to shed any clarity on this possibility but simply adds further to the puzzle. The Brynanian people must be vigilant against foreign interference in our sovereign territory. Unity, above all else will be required to bring an end to the terror and restore freedom and justice to Beta province.
